Why People Choose the High Country

People move to the High Country for a lot of reasons— cooler summers, four-season beauty, a slower pace, outdoor recreation, proximity to a university, or simply to live somewhere that doesn't feel like everywhere else. What keeps them here is harder to articulate but easy to recognize: a deep sense of place, a community that values roots, and mountains that never get old.

CHAPTER 1 The Communities — Each One Different

Boone

College town · Regional hub

Elevation: 3,333 ft · Watauga County

The largest town in the High Country and home to Appalachian State University. Year-round population, widest selection of services, restaurants, and healthcare. Four-season energy — lively and growing without losing its mountain character.

Best for: Full-time relocation, families, university connection, access to services.

Blowing Rock

Upscale village · Art & dining

Elevation: 3,500 ft · Watauga County

Charming Main Street, fine dining, art galleries, and some of the highest property values in the region. A walkable village that draws second-home buyers and retirees seeking a refined mountain lifestyle. Close to Boone but a world apart in feel.

Best for: Second homes, retirees, luxury buyers, walkable village lifestyle.

Banner Elk

Ski country · Resort lifestyle

Elevation: 3,739 ft · Avery County

Nestled between Sugar Mountain and Beech Mountain ski resorts. Strong STR market, four-season outdoor recreation, and a quieter mountain community feel. Lees-McRae College adds a small college-town element.

Best for: Ski lovers, STR investors, outdoor recreation seekers.

Valle Crucis

Historic valley · Rural charm

Elevation: 2,700 ft · Watauga County

Home to the original Mast General Store and one of the most pastoral valleys in the High Country. Slower pace, historic farmland, and a strong sense of place. Lower elevation means milder winters.

Best for: Those seeking rural character, pastoral land, historic setting.

Beech Mountain

Highest town in the East

Elevation: 5,506 ft · Avery County

The highest incorporated town east of the Rockies. True alpine feel, ski resort on your doorstep, and summer temperatures that rarely exceed 75°F. A tight-knit community with a loyal second-home following.

Best for: Summer escape, ski lifestyle, extreme elevation enthusiasts.

West Jefferson

Artsy · Undervalued · Authentic

Elevation: 2,900 ft · Ashe County

A thriving arts community with murals, galleries, and a walkable downtown that punches above its size. More affordable than Watauga County. Home to the New River — one of the oldest rivers in the world.

Best for: Value buyers, artists, those seeking authentic small-town character.

CHAPTER 2 Life in the High Country — Four Seasons, Real Winters

Living at elevation in the southern Appalachians is a genuine four-season experience — not the mild, forgettable version of seasons that much of the South gets. Summers are legitimately cool. Falls are spectacular. Winters bring real snow. And spring arrives slowly, building anticipation. If you're relocating from a warmer climate, this is not a small adjustment — and most people who make the move say it's the best thing they've ever done.

Spring

- Late arrival — often April into May
- Wildflowers, waterfalls at peak flow
- Trout fishing season opens
- Mud season on unpaved roads
- Real estate market heats up fast

Summer

- Avg. July high: ~72°F in Boone
- Natural air conditioning — no humidity
- Hiking, mountain biking, fly fishing
- App State students return — town fills up
- Peak tourism season for the region

Fall

- Peak color: mid-Oct at elevation
- Most beautiful time of the year, full stop
- Heaviest tourist traffic — plan ahead
- Apple season in Ashe and Avery
- Real estate activity remains strong

Winter

- Boone averages 30+ inches of snow/year
- Beech Mountain averages 80+ inches
- Ski season: Dec–Mar at 3 nearby resorts
- Roads ice over — AWD/4WD essential
- Quieter, slower — locals love it

EVERYDAY SERVICES

- Expanding restaurant scene with both local favorites and national chains
- High-speed internet widely available in Boone and Blowing Rock; more limited in rural areas — always verify before buying remotely
- AppalCART provides free public transit throughout Boone and surrounding area — 13 routes, zero cost
- Asheville (90 min south) and Charlotte (2 hrs) provide metro services when needed

GETTING AROUND

- Acar is essentialfor most High Country living — no regional rail
- AWD or 4WD strongly recommended for anyone at higher elevation or on private roads
- Boone has the closest commercial airport access via Charlotte Douglas (CLT) — 2 hrs
- Asheville Regional Airport (AVL) is 1.5 hrs and growing in direct routes
- Mountain roads add time to everything — adjust your mental map of distance vs. travel time

> The most common thing I hear from people who relocated here: "We should have done this ten years ago." The adjustment to mountain life — slower pace, real seasons, genuine community — takes about six months and then you can't imagine living anywhere else.

CHAPTER 4 The Market — What to Expect in 2026

The High Country real estate market has appreciated significantly over the past decade, driven by remote work migration, second-home demand, and constrained mountain supply. Inventory remains limited — there simply isn't much buildable land. Here's what buyers are facing in 2026:

COMMUNITY	TYPICAL PRICE RANGE	MARKET CHARACTER	BEST FOR
Boone	$300K–$700K	Competitive, low inventory near campus	Full-time relocation, families
Blowing Rock	$500K–$2M+	Premium, strong appreciation history	Luxury second home, retirement
Banner Elk	$350K–$1M+	Active, ski-driven seasonal demand	Second home, STR investment
Valle Crucis	$400K–$1.5M	Limited listings, strong long-term hold	Pastoral lifestyle, land buyers
Beech Mountain	$250K–$700K	Seasonal, ski-community driven Most	Summer escape, ski lifestyle
West Jefferson	$200K–$800K	affordable entry point in region	Value buyers, artists, retirees

CHAPTER 5 Your Roadmap to Buying in the High Country

STEPS 1–4: BEFORE YOU SEARCH

- Step 1 — Define your use case: Primary home, second home, retirement, investment, or a combination? This shapes everything about your search.
- Step 2 — Choose your community: Spend time in each area during different seasons before committing. A weekend visit in July tells you nothing about February.
- Step 3 — Get pre-approved: Mountain properties move fast. Know your budget before you fall in love with something. Second-home financing has different requirements than primary.
- Step 4 — Engage a local agent: The High Country is not a market you can navigate from afar. Local knowledge of roads, microclimates, neighborhoods, and off-market inventory matters enormously.

STEPS 5–8: THROUGH CLOSING

- Step 5 — Search with patience: Inventory is limited. The right property may take time. Don't compromise on location or condition — the mountains will always be here.
- Step 6 — Due diligence on mountain specifics: Well, septic, road access, slope, utilities — mountain due diligence is more complex than a flat suburban purchase. (See our Land Guide for details.)
- Step 7 — Negotiate with local insight: Knowing what a property is actually worth — and why — requires someone who has walked comparable properties and knows the micro-market.
- Step 8 — Engage a local NC real estate attorney: Required for closing in NC. Your agent can refer you to experienced mountain transaction attorneys.

A note from Andrew: I was born with roots here and came back as soon as I could. After 20+ years working in non-profit camp management across the Southeast, I came home to the High Country and never looked back. When I help someone relocate here, I'm not just helping them buy a house — I'm welcoming them into a place I love deeply. That matters to me. If you're thinking about making the move, call me. I'll give you the honest version of what life here is actually like — the good and the hard — and help you find the right corner of these mountains for you.
